[What you need to know to start the day: Get New York Today in your inbox.] Hillary Clinton was in the capital for the start of the Senate impeachment trial, and amid a day of drama around President Trump's call with the president of Ukraine — marked by his request that Mr. Zelensky investigate Joe Biden, one of his chief political rivals — Mrs. Clinton's team was poised to bring to the floor the Senate resolution calling for the articles of impeachment. Mrs. Clinton's allies were said to be contemplating a daylong delay, instead leaving the votes on the House-passed articles of impeachment to the Senate. They were concerned about how senators would react to what they feared would be a lengthy debate, and demanded changes in the language of the resolution, including the insertion of a line calling for the Senate trial to be conducted with "the impartiality and dignity it deserves." They were also concerned about fallout from the president's interview on Fox News, in which he declared himself "not under any pressure" to solicit foreign interference in the 2020 election, and he warned that "every president in modern history has done whatever they feel they need to do in order to get re-elected." The immediate problem was that Mrs. Clinton's team felt the House vote on the articles of impeachment, which were approved on a mostly party-line vote, was rushed and undignified. For the president's allies, that was a bad part of the day, and not the biggest problem. The larger problem for the president was the late night interview with Sean Hannity. As Jennifer Palmieri, Mrs. Clinton's communications director, put it, it was "a pretty difficult day — for us."The Food and Drug Administration has granted Fast Track approval to Pfizer's new cholesterol medication, pemafibrate, which could help prevent strokes, heart attacks, and other cardiovascular events. The news: Studies have shown that some statin medications, like Pfizer's Lipid Treatment Assessment and Monitoring Evaluation (LUX-LITE), reduce a person's risk for a stroke and heart attack by 20-30%. Pemafibrate, which is also being tested for help in treating diabetic cardiovascular disease, may be better than statins at lowering cholesterol, and has been shown to be as effective as Lipitor at reducing triglycer

Increase in the incidence of atypical hyperplasia in the endometrial surface epithelium. Endometrial biopsies were analysed for endometrial hyperplasia, atypical hyperplasia, polyps and atypical polyps. Atypical hyperplasia and atypical polyps were diagnosed in 0.32% and 0.42% of specimens, respectively. The incidence of atypical hyperplasia was found to be 0.08% in all biopsies and 0.11% in all specimens examined. In the postmenopausal group, however, the incidence of atypical hyperplasia and atypical polyps was 1.2% and 0.65%, respectively. In the postmenopausal group, the incidence of atypical hyperplasia was 0.16% in the endometrial surface epithelium of specimens with simple hyperplasia, 1.1% in those with complex hyperplasia and 0.31% in those with atypical polyp. In specimens from patients with adenocarcinoma, the incidence of atypical hyperplasia was 0.41% in the endometrial surface epithelium, and 0.37% in the endometrial glands. These results show that the incidence of atypical hyperplasia in the endometrial surface epithelium is significantly higher in postmenopausal women than in the premenopausal group. Furthermore, in women with endometrial hyperplasia, adenocarcinoma or atypical polyp, the incidence of atypical hyperplasia and atypical polyps is significantly higher in the endometrial surface epithelium than in the endometrial glands.1.
